

Judge not ...

I found the letter from Father David Watt regarding the Prime Minister's recent marriage a bit rich and even judgmental ("Albo vows vex", Nov 7).

Whether or not the Catholic-raised Albanese believes in allowing legal abortions or not, or that he has had a civil marriage ceremony, is none of Father David's business. He should be more concerned with the Catholic Church's poor response to their own priests/brothers' child sexual abuse allegations before he begins to judge others.

Access denied

Thanks Ben Harvey (Opinion, Dec 7) for rightly stating that the internet ban for under 16s should really be re-marketed as a ban on open access to our impressionable kids by the profit-driven mega-tech companies!

Make Swan sing

I totally agree with Roy Stall and his comments in The Sunday Times ("Quay to success is over east", Your Say, Dec 7).

South Bank in Brisbane (pictured) is a great example and we have the foreshore on the Swan to create something spectacular and unique. Not a bloody racetrack for revheads.

Ban leans to Left

I believe that governments should be judged on what they do rather than what they say.

On that basis, perhaps the real reason for Labor banning minors from using social media is to prevent interference with left wing indoctrination of schoolchildren.
