Lots of ener

You should have seen all the advertising from the State Government's "State of Energy" campaign. I cannot imagine how much it is costing, but I do wonder what it is trying to achieve.

"We're securing more affordable, reliable and locally produced energy" is the claim.

But what does it mean?

"More affordable" than what?

"More affordable" than today?

"More affordable" than what it might be?

I bet it does not mean that my bills will go down so that it will be cheaper than it used it to be.

And "more reliable" also does not stand up to scrutiny either. I don't want "more reliable" energy, I just want reliable energy.

This whole advertising campaign is a con job using our taxes to con us into thinking our energy situation will be great. It is no different than the tactics being used with racetracks and rugby league teams and ferry terminals to distract us from the real problems we have. It's all just bread and circuses.

Let's start with ambulance ramping. Any comments Premier Roger Cook? Aboriginal welfare? Housing? Regional development? Planning?
